

From: Charles Graham
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/18/01 10:40pm
Subject: Comments regarding Microsoft

Dear Justice Department,

As a member of the software industry since graduation with a BSCIS and BSBA from Ohio State University in 1984, a Microsoft stockholder and a Microsoft business partner, I find it refreshing to see this ugly chapter of government interference in the fast moving high tech industry coming to a close. Microsoft should be held to the same laws as every other corporation in the land. However, the actual damages to anyone in this case is highly suspect. It appears that this case was brought by a number of companies unable to succeed in the industry without resorting to the courts, and some sympathetic government lawyers eager to hang the Microsoft hide on their wall as a trophy. The issue between Netscape and Microsoft as long since been settled and Netscape is a Microsoft business partner. Microsoft came up with their own browser, a fairly simple piece of software, rather than buy Netscape licenses for it's thousands of employees. Since the development of the browser was already paid for, they offered the browser as part of their operating system to enhance their Internet presence. I see nothing wrong with this. The general market has flourished well due to the standardization Microsoft provided in operating systems and office suites(Word, Excel, etc.). This country's government should be treating Microsoft as a national treasure. The US government should be approaching Microsoft and asking how we can enhance the development of Microsoft and grow the software industry in the USA as it is one of the few industries with any future in the USA. We are lucky that Bill Gates didn't pack up his company and move it across the border into Canada. Other countries would nurture a wonderful success such as Microsoft, not try to tear it down.

This lawsuit caused the technology bubble to burst and caused more loss in shareholder value for millions of Americans than any other single event in history. If I was a government lawyer, this is not the legacy I would want to leave behind. A legacy in which millions of Americans were robbed of their retirement savings, a legacy of millions of layoffs and company closures. And for what? What did this lawsuit actually accomplish? Even if Microsoft had been broken up, was this a good thing for America? Once again, what could the motives behind this lawsuit be other than a bunch of "has been" sour grapes from companies like Sun Microsystems who got together with a bunch of underpaid government lawyers who want to make a name for themselves and fostered by the Clinton administration who was angry at Microsoft for not contributing enough to the Clinton campaign. Isn't there a better use of the justice department's time than this? Isn't there any "real" criminals that you should be focusing on?

Sincerely,

Charles Graham
Salem Automation Inc.
4500 Indiana Ave, Suite 40
Winston-Salem, NC 27106
cwgraham@sai-net.com
Phone 336-661-0890x106

CC: MSFIN@Microsoft.com@inetgw